During the 5th parliamentary elections held on November 1, 2015, Azerbaijan determined the deputies for the National Assembly. According to the preliminary results of the Central Election Committee of Azerbaijan, the voter turnout was 55.7% (2.89 million) and the New Azerbaijan Party won the elections with 74% of total votes. The Central Election Committee of Azerbaijan will officially announce the election results after their approval by the Constitutional Court.

The National Assembly of Azerbaijan is a unicameral legislative body, which consists of 125 deputies. According to the Article 83 of The Constitution, the deputies are elected in accordance with the majority voting system and general, equal and direct elections by way of free, individual and secret voting for a 5-year term. All Azerbaijani citizens not younger than 25 could take part in the elections in an established order (Article 85). The National Assembly will have powers after authority of 83 of its deputies are approved (Article 87). According to the results of the 4th parliamentary elections for the National Assembly held on November 7, 2010, the New Azerbaijan Party won 71 seats, representatives of other parties won 12 seats and independent candidates won 42 seats. As the single-party government had the vast majority in the National Assembly, the government did not face a serious opposition during the rule making process.

This year the parliamentary elections were held in an environment of high socio-economic tensions and regional instabilities. As widely known, due to the global economic crisis the oil and natural gas prices had decreased. This decrease had a negative effect on the economic development of the country, high amount of the revenue sources of which significantly depends on oil and natural gas sales, and also caused decrease of the gold-exchange reserves of Azerbaijan to $2.4 billion. At the same time, Azerbaijani authorities determined the national currency, manat, which depreciated by 33.9% in February 2015. In order to deal with the socio-economic problems the President of Azerbaijan, Ilham Aliyev, took measures both to strengthen the fight against corruption and to improve the deteriorated economic conditions. For instance, some of the ministries were changed and the decision on privatization of the public bank, namely, Azerbaijan International Bank, was signed.

Moreover, both strengthening propaganda and ideology of the ISIS among the youth in the Azerbaijani society and intensification of the conflict between the Azerbaijani and Armenian military forces in Nagorno-Karabagh in September 2015 negatively affected the regional stability. In these circumstances, Azerbaijani authorities started to implement stricter control on the financial transactions of all officially registered religious institutions and non-governmental organizations in the country, and started to solve the problems on the Azerbaijani-Armenian border in a decisive attitude. Besides, on June 4, 2015, the Foreign Ministry of Azerbaijan sent a diplomatic note to the Organization for Security and Co-operation in Europe (OSCE) expressing its plans to close down its Project Coordinator Office in Baku. Although no basic reason for the closing was mentioned in the note, the Western Press claimed that the decision for shutting down the Office was closely related to the heightened criticism of Azerbaijan’s record on civil society and on freedom of the media in general, and the Presidential Election held in October 2013 in particular. In total 767 candidates entered the 2015 Parliamentary Elections representing 18 parties and one bloc of parties. Freedom-2015, formed by 7 opposition parties. On October 28, 2015 the Musavat Party announced that they withdrew their 25 registered candidates and they would not take part in the elections. Similarly, the opposition party, the Azerbaijan Popular Front Party, and the National Council of Democratic Forces, which was established jointly by approximately 100 independent politicians, intellectual groups and various directors of non-governmental organizations (who were not pleased with the political regime) boycotted the elections.

According to the Azerbaijan’s Central Election Committee, as a result of the voting in all 5547 polling stations the distribution of deputies in the National Assembly is as follows: the New Azerbaijan Party – 70, the Whole Azerbaijan Popular Front Party – 1, the Azerbaijan Political Party of Democratic Reforms – 1, the Great Order Party – 1, the National Revival Movement Party – 1, the Azerbaijan Social Democratic Party – 1, the Civil Solidarity Party – 2, the Motherland Party – 1, the Azerbaijan Social Prosperity Party – 1, the Unity Party – 1, the Civil Union Party – 1, the Azerbaijan Democratic Enlightenment Party – 1. The independent candidates took remaining 43 seats in the National Assembly.

Over 503 representatives from 40 international organizations and more than 83 thousand local observers watched the Azerbaijan Parliamentary Elections as electoral observers. For instance, the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe sent 30 observers. However, the OSCE’s Democratic Institutions and Human Rights Office did not attend this process. In general, both the observers from the international organizations and the local observers declared that the parliamentary elections were held in a free, fair, transparent and democratic environment.

In conclusion, it should be noted that although the Parliamentary Elections in Azerbaijan were held in conditions of both high security tension over the region and the worsening of the socio-economic problems, the opposition parties could not get enough support of the population. It could be indicated that Azerbaijani citizens prefer to vote for the ruling party in order to strengthen the regional stability, economic development, social welfare and security. Therefore, the Azerbaijani society has once again given a vote of confidence to the New Azerbaijan Party, which is ruled by the President of Azerbaijan, Ilham Aliyev.
