The elections to the sixth Parliament of Kazakhstan, the Majilis of the Parliament, were held on March 20, 2016. The parliamentary elections were held earlier than it was previously scheduled due to the initiative of the parliamentarians of the fifth Parliament, who appealed to the President of Kazakhstan, Nursultan Nazarbayev, to dissolve the Majilis and call for a new election prematurely.

The main purpose of the aforementioned initiative was to implement Nazarbayev's proposal to have the parliamentary elections held on January 15, 2012, and to form a new Majilis, which would be able to receive a vote of confidence in order to modernize the country.

According to the Constitution of the Republic of Kazakhstan, the Parliament consists of two Chambers: the Senate and the Majilis. The Senate constitutes 41, 17 deputies. The Senate shall be composed of deputies elected in twos from each of 14 regions, Almaty city, which is a city of national importance, and Astana city, which is the capital of the country. 15 deputies are assigned by the President in order to represent national, cultural and other interests of the society (Article 50). The deputies of the Senate should be elected on the basis of an indirect electoral right under the secret ballot. Half of the Senate members are elected every three years. In this light, the regular Senate elections were held on November 30, 2015, Nursultan Nazarbayev indicated the Roadmap, which sets the measures that are needed in solving all the problems, which negatively affect the development of the country. He indicated the Roadmap with three main concepts and five main directions. These five main directions are developed to achieve structural transformation with holistic view in order to fight against the crisis, which negatively affects the development of the country: 1) Stabilization of the financial sector; 2) Optimization of the fiscal policy; 3) Privatization and promotion of the economic competition; 4) New investment policy framework; 5) New social policies.

It is obvious that new legal arrangements should be made in order to strengthen the implementation of the main strategies for the continuous development of the country and of the five main directions mentioned above. Therefore, Nursultan Nazarbayev emphasized that the initiative of the Parliament was a practically responsible behavior and that renewing the Majilis would positively affect both the country and the citizens. We can observe that the Kazakhstani society has responsibly approached the elections and has given a vote of confidence to the Nur Otan Party, which is headed by Nursultan Nazarbayev once more. This can also be proven by the results of the elections.

234 candidates from a list of six-parties attained servers from the Parliamentary Assembly of the Nur Otan Party, 35 from the Ak Zhol Democratic Party of Kazakhstan, 22 from the Communist People's Party of Kazakhstan, 19 from the Aysyl National Patriotic Party, 8 from the Unity Party and 23 from the National Social Democratic Party were included in the election list. According to the results of the Central Election Committee of Kazakhstan, the result of the vote count in electoral districts with total of 9840 seats each. The most active attendance to the election was observed in four regions: Almaty region (94.06%), Atyrau region (85.37%), South Kazakhstan region (84.85%) and Kostanai region (84.85%). On the contrary, the least active attendance was observed in Almaty city (84.1%).

On March 21, 2016, in order to determine the rest of the members of the sixth Majilis the elections were held by the Assembly of People of Kazakhstan. According to the results of the Central Election Committee, 83.41% or 372 out of 446 registered voters gave their votes electing nine parliamentarians, among different ethnic groups such as Kazakh, Russian, Mordvin, Korean, Armenian, Chechen, Uyghur, Ukrainian and Dungan. A total of 995 observers from international and local organizations observed the parliamentary elections in Kazakhstan. For instance, 8 observers from the Parliamentary Assembly of Turkic-speaking countries (TURKPA) attended the process. The observers from international and local organizations announced that the elections were held in a free, fair, transparent and democratic environment. In conclusion, in order to protect themselves from negative effects of conflicts in the region and to fight against the socio-economic problems caused by the global crisis, Kazakhstani citizens have shown their support to the Nur Otan Party, which has been carrying out the policy of being “An Eternal State”.

Note: Elections of Maslikhats were held along with the elections to the sixth Parliament. According to the territorial election commission, the Nur Otan Party has won the majority of the seats in Maslikhats.
