CURRENT DEVELOPMENTS OF CHINA’S ONE BELT, ONE ROAD INITIATIVE

Over the last three decades, China has reached a high economic growth rate. Now, functioning in an open economy, Chinese business firms need to enter global markets and participate more actively in global competition. The co-construction of the One Belt, One Road (OBOR) project launched by the Chinese leader Xi Jinping in 2013 is one of the major goals of Chinese Government. This project is a major initiative for China to carry out open economic policies under new geopolitical conditions and it is also the most important project that China expects to provide special benefits for the Eurasian region. The initial outcomes of the OBOR project can be explained as follows.

First, the OBOR have gained wide international acceptance since the number of its participants has increased gradually. About 70 countries and organizations have expressed their support and contribution to the project. This global support has exceeded the scope of the traditional OBOR project and helped to form an international cooperation framework with broad influence. Meanwhile, 34 countries and international organizations have already signed a number of inter-governmental cooperation agreements with China on jointly building the OBOR project. Based on these inter-government cooperation agreements, specific cooperation programs will be additionally formulated. The Chinese Foreign Minister, Wang Yi, and the United Nations Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific (UNESCAP) Executive Secretary, Shamshad Akhtar, signed the letter of intent in Beijing on April 11, 2016. According to the document, the two sides will jointly promote regional cooperation and the implementation of the OBOR initiative. The two sides will also make specific action plans and encourage relevant countries to synchronize their development strategies with the initiative.

Second, the Chinese side could manage to set financial provision mechanisms within the framework of the OBOR. Several institutions were established to finance the Chinese OBOR initiative. The first institution is the Silk Road Fund with $40 billion capital, which is planned to be increased up to $100 billion. The second institution is the New Development Bank BRICS (NDB BRICS). The total amount of funds of these three institutions could reach $240 billion. The AIIB started operations in January 2016, and the first group of projects financed by the Silk Road Fund has been officially launched. Nowadays, countries along the route are discussing the possibility of allocation of mentioned funds for establishment or expansion of bilateral and multilateral cooperation.

Third, a transportation network is gradually taking its final shape within the framework of the OBOR. Currently, the construction of the connectivity network has begun on the Belgrade-Budapest Railway and the Jakarta-Bandung High-speed Railway. The China-Laos Railway, China-Thailand Railway, and other pan-Asia railway networks have started construction in March 2016. In this framework, Beijing achieved to increase the number of the freight trains on the China-Europe route. In 2015, the total amount of freight trains from China to Europe reached 815, which is 2.7 times more than the number of freight trains in 2014. On April 26, 2016, Baoding Hebei Province of China sent the first freight train on the Hebei-Europe route. The abovementioned railway will pass through the Manchuria station in the southern region of Russia in the direction of the Belarusian cargo station Kolyadichi at Minsk. Moreover, in November 2014 the Chinese Ministry of Railway Transport announced that over $35 billion would be allocated for construction of the Baku-Tbilisi-Kars railway project launched in 2010. In order to put the Baku-Tbilisi-Kars railway into operation in 2017 the Chinese side is planning to provide both financial and technological assistance.

Fourth, cooperation process in moving of production facilities from China to OBOR countries is accelerating. China has signed agreements with 20 countries, especially Indonesia, Kazakhstan, and Mongolia to implement institutional collaboration in increasing the production capacity. At present, 52 projects, with a total investment of $27 billion are being implemented.

Fifth, the countries along the route are striving to promote the level of trade and investment, to explore various types of free trade zones and to accelerate the integration process. Russia and China signed a Joint statement on cooperation on the construction of the joint Eurasian Economic Union (EEU) and the Silk Road Economic Belt project on May 8, 2015 in Moscow. Consequently, the EEU, a regional organization, which was initially formed with the aim of protecting itself from excessive economic influence of China, has changed its direction toward the interface with the Chinese initiative. Under the OBOR project China could manage to initiate the process of the economic corridor shaping. Currently, China is accelerating the process of formulating its plans on construction of economic corridor with Mongolia and Russia. On June 22, 2016, in Tashkent China, Russia and Mongolia endorsed a development plan to build an economic corridor linking the three neighbors, pledging to boost transportation connectivity and economic cooperation in border regions. The idea of constructing the economic corridor linking the three countries was proposed in 2014 when President Xi suggested connecting China's Silk Road Economic Belt with Russia's transcontinental rail plan and Mongolia's Steppe Road program. The proposal was put into action in 2015 when Mongolia's first highway program started. Moreover, within the framework of China-Pakistan economic corridor aimed at connecting Chinese Xinjiang with Pakistani Gwadar port Beijing is planning to expand global trade with South Asia, the Middle East and Africa.

Sixth, people-to-people and cultural interactions have been intensified. China has set up government scholarships to the nations along the Silk Road, held culture years and art festivals in the countries which are located along the route, and carried out the Silk Road Film Bridge Project and the Silk Road Book Translation Project, having positive effects on people-to-people and cultural cooperation in the OBOR initiative.

Currently the OBOR initiative is at the stage of transforming from being discussed to being accepted to a certain level both economically and politically. To date, the OBOR countries could manage to avoid the direct conflict of interest formally reaching an agreement on their participation in the project. However, with transition to the implementation phase, there is an essential need for the approval of the Official One Belt One Road Action Plan, according to which the OBOR funds will be allocated.
